CLOSE-UP ON Bach

On July 3, 4, and 5, Harrison House of Glen Cove, Long Island, will open its doors to a select group of guests of Rosalyn Tureck and Virgil Fox for a holiday weekend with music.

Harrison House of Glen Cove is one of the new Executive Conference Centers which are used during the week by government, universities, and large corporations for educational purposes. It is situated one hour from Manhattan, and offers you a relaxed weekend with all the luxury and elegance of a grand country estate (it was the Summer White House for President Herbert Hoover), and the musical and intellectual stimulation of being with two outstanding and famous artists-in-residence.

No matter how exciting a concert hall recital may have been for you, there is nothing like observing a performing artist's craftsmanship close-up. Usually, only a few privileged friends and colleagues experience music played by great artists in intimate, salon atmospheres. Rare, too, are chances to become acquainted with those artists, close-up—to live with them, and to develop an appreciation for their artistry in a different, more personal way.

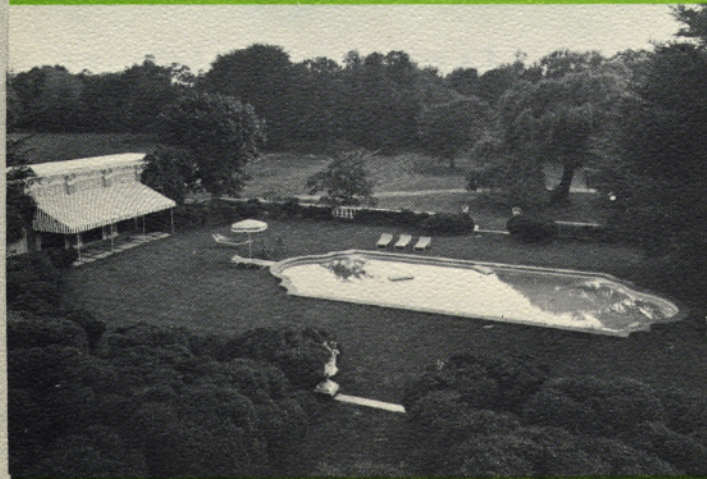

Now, through the hospitality of Harrison House, Rosalyn Tureck and Virgil Fox extend a personal invitation to you to spend the July Fourth Holiday listening to them—on piano, harpsichord, and organ—perform and discuss the music of Johann Sebastian Bach, close-up.
